

Dalton/LSDalton Site and Benchmark Licence Agreement for release Dalton2016

Dalton/LSDalton release Dalton2016 is an experimental suite of codes for the calculation of molecular properties: DALTON, LSDALTON, scripts for use, and utility programs.

A site and benchmark licence for Dalton2016 means that the site may install and make generally available the executables, scripts, utility programs, basis sets, and the manuals of the Dalton2016 programs, subject to the terms given below. The site may also benchmark the executables. This agreement applies to all revisions of the Dalton2016 release. In the following all references to Dalton2016 refer to all parts of release Dalton2016, that is, all files in the distribution as well as generated object files and executables.

In order to obtain and make available or benchmark Dalton2016, the site is required to agree to the following terms:

1. Copyright for the source code and the documentation rests with the authors (see <http://daltonprogram.org>) and is not being placed in the public domain.
 - (a) The site is required to make sure that only the Dalton2016 executable(s), shell scripts, utility programs, basis sets, and the documentation (in postscript and html format) are available to users at the site. All source files of the programs must be properly protected in order to prevent users from accessing them.
 - (b) When the site stop using a computer, proper actions will be taken to make sure that all Dalton2016 files, including object files and executables, are deleted on that computer.
 - (c) All copies of Dalton2016 will be deleted when it has ended its useful life.
 - (d) Changes in the source codes are only to be made in order to make the code compile and perform correctly on the site, as well as to upgrade the code through patches supplied from the authors.
 - (e) The Dalton2016 source codes may not, in whole or in part, be included in any program code you distribute to other users, whether they have a Dalton2016 licence or not, without the specific written consent of the Dalton2016 authors or their representatives.
